Built ca. 1750, the Benjamin & Janneken Deyo House is a significant example of 18th-century stone domestic architecture in the Town of New Paltz. One of only eighteen early stone houses surviving in the town, the Deyo house represents an important artifact of New Paltz's formative era and cultural development. Stone houses are iconic in the history of the town and Ulster County, and they are important symbols of the Dutch heritage in the Hudson Valley. Unlike the more numerous and less permanent wood buildings built in the 18th century, stone houses have survived into the 21st century. Although generally revered as relics of a primitive past, they were the elite houses in their period and provide valuable evidence of architectural traditions, construction methods, material life.

The Deyo House represents a group of two-room stone houses built with two front doors that were precursors to houses with internal entries or passages, and although one doorway has been walled in, the original façade is otherwise unaltered. Like many stone houses, a third room was added later in its history. Dormers are a 20th-century addition.

The New York State Historic Preservation Office has determined that 18th-century stone houses are individually eligible for the National Register and that the changes that have occurred in subsequent historical periods contribute to that significance. In the New Paltz context, all of the surviving stone houses in the town are worthy of local designation and protection.
