Built ca. 1800 and enlarged in ca. 1850, the DuBois-Deyo House is a significant example of stone domestic architecture in the Town of New Paltz at the turn of the 19th century. One of only eighteen early stone houses surviving in the town, the house represents an important artifact of New Paltz's formative era and cultural development. Stone houses are iconic in the history of the town and Ulster County, and they are important symbols of the Dutch heritage in the Hudson Valley. Unlike the more numerous and less permanent wood buildings built in the 18th century, stone houses have survived into the 21st century. Although generally revered as relics of a primitive past, they were the elite houses in their period and provide valuable evidence of architectural traditions, construction methods, material life.

The DuBois-Deyo House represents a group of stone houses built at the end of the period of traditional architecture and construction methods in New Paltz. Like many others, it appears to have originated with a two-room plan that was later enlarged to accommodate a center entry and stair.

The New York State Historic Preservation Office has determined that 18th-century stone houses are individually eligible for the National Register and that the changes that have occurred in subsequent historical periods contribute to that significance. In the New Paltz context, all of the surviving stone houses in the town are worthy of local designation and protection.
